

Research Proposal is the outlined description of what your project entails. It is similar to the cover page of a book that gives a brief insight to the readers about its content. Being the initial document to be reviewed by your supervisors and committee, it holds an utmost importance in research paper writing. Before you begin, you need to understand the necessary elements that must be instilled in the preliminary text of your study. Another essential task is to script the proposal in the correct format, following an appropriate layout for each element to be described. To ease your task, we have offered you a Pro forma of a Research Proposal highlighting the essential parts.
